Here at UC Davis Medical Center we have developed localized guidelines incorporating data from our own patient populations to help providers make better antimicrobial decisions more easily. In addition, we've collected and organized many of the relevant national guidelines as well to help provide a centralized location for most your antimicrobial management needs. National guidelines are produced regularly by the CDC, Infectious Disease Society of America (IDSA), and others to provide generalized guidance on the management of common conditions. Tabbed below are the most up to date guidelines organized by location, syndrome, and pathogen. There is increasing evidence that the vast majority, likely 90-94%, of reported penicillin allergies are either out grown, inaccurate, or no longer relevant. Unfortunately, penicillin and related beta-lactam antibiotics are frequently the drugs of choice for many infections being clinically superior to the alternatives. They additionally are often well tolerated and significantly cheaper than their competitors. Most of these no longer clinically meaningful allergies can be identified and corrected through a combination of chart review, skin testing, and oral challenge. Here at UC Davis Medical Center we will shortly begin working through Inpatient Pharmacy to screen for possible erroneous beta-lactam allergies and proactively challenge low risk patients in order to open up better antibiotic options for patients in the future if the need should arise. Our protocols are viewable below. 1071. Micrococcus Bacteremia in Cancer Patients: The Role of Catheters and Cytokines (GCSF) Session: Poster Session: Bacteria II Saturday, October 6, 2007: 12:00 AM Room: Poster Halls G-H BACKGROUND. Micrococcus bacteremia (MB) has been rarely studied and occasionally linked to catheter related bloodstream infections (CRBSI). Current IDSA guidelines for CRBSI do not specify management for this organism. We evaluated a consecutive series of cancer patients with MB. METHODS: Between 1997 and 2006, we retrospectively reviewed the charts of 90 patients with MB in a university affiliated tertiary cancer center. Based on a previous study, bacteremia was characterized as positive blood culture with >15 colony forming units. Definition of CRBSI was according to current IDSA guidelines.RESULTS: Most (90%) of the patients had CRBSI that included definitive CRBSI in 41 (46%) and probable in 40 (44%) patients. The median age was 49 y (range 3-82) and 51% were female. Most patients had hematologic malignancy (54%) followed by solid tumor (40%). Prior CRBSI occurred in 8 patients (8.9%). Neutropenia during MB occurred in 50% of patients and 52.2% had sepsis syndrome. Most were treated with antibiotics (94%), vancomycin being the most common (45%). From all Micrococcus isolates, 100% were susceptible to vancomycin, 84.4% to rifampin and 41.1% to oxacillin. Risk factors for relapse were not receiving GCSF (P = 0.03) or hemodialysis (P = 0.014) within one month of bacteremia and limited response to initial antibiotic therapy (64% vs 99%; P idsa crbsi guidelines 2019. crbsi guidelines 2017 idsa. crbsi idsa guidelines pdf. idsa guidelines 2009 crbsi
