Free certificates Ā ē ā,~ "I like to see real ideas, Ā ē ā,~" says John Davis. And for almost two decades, in a series of modest cultural strokes and otherwise, which was his thing. His social entrepreneurship has begun In 1990 with the transformation of a dilapidated building in the Minnesota Farming Village of New York Mills in an artistic retreat. DaVis, Davis's ambitions became less conventional. Ā ē ā,~ "There is nothing more, Ā ē ā,~ "says ā ē ā ē ā,~" provides opportunities to people to do something great. Ā »A portfolio (taken from its set of business cards): Dreamer after the finishing of school art, Davis bought an abandoned farm and turned it into a refuge for urban artists, teasing three mortgages and houses of Painting to cover costs. The goal of him: Winning interest from people who ordinarily looked at art. Ā ē ā,~ "Art, at its best, concerns the creation of access to ideas and thought." Founder in 1991, Davis persuaded New York Mills to kicks in $ 35,000 for a cultural center. The locals disapproved the sumptuous investment - but the economy prospered accordingly. More than a dozen open companies and works have grown by 40%. He says Coral Lambert, a British sculptor who lived briefly in the city: Ā ē ā,~ "That was John's success. High art was taken to Ā »Think-Off Davis organized a local debate in 1993 on the nature of humanity. This has expanded into the National Great American Think-Off.
