The transition from the middle school to high school marks a rather exciting moment in a life of a child - and a life of a parent. But it can also be scary. It's not just a move in a different school - it's a completely new environment. The beginning of the high school can be overwhelming and confused, and not only because the buildings are physically larger and the campus is not familiar. Children who leave the "bubble" of the middle school for the high school jungle not only face new teachers and academic requests, but also a completely different set of students, some of which are three more old years and much more mature. The high school can be disastrous if a child does not make the transition smoothly. "more children fail a course in nine degree compared to any other degree [source: hechering]. Most school systems brings the road implementing Transition programs, which can involve everything from campus visits to shadowing students, but is never easy. Our list of 10 best differences between middle school and high school will help you identify some of the pitfalls.
